Sample of Bullet Format Nomination (Fictional)

- Pat Doe is nominated for Lebanon School Hall of Fame for his creativity, dedication, and exemplary contributions to the film industry.

- He graduated from Lebanon in 1968.

- He received a Bachelors of Science with dual majors in Math and Art from University of Los Angles in 1973 and Masters of Art in film from the University of Southern California (USC) in 1975.
 - Master's thesis was focused on incorporating sculpture into animation.
 - One member of his thesis review team was Director David Lynch.
 - Lynch had utilized sculpture in animation.

- Lynch hired Pat as 3rd Assistant Director on Lynch's next film, Easerhead.
 - He was credited with advancing animation into a new generation of technology.

- Next came a promotion as Assistant Creative Director for Lynch's Oscar Winning film Elephant Man.
 - He was credited with developing the initial artist vision for the central figure of the film.
 - David Lynch mentioned him briefly during his Oscar acceptance speech for his creative insight.

- He was nominated with two other creators for a technical Oscar for Mulholland Drive in 1981.

- Pat noted the influence computers were making on film by 1982.

-- He returning to the USC for what eventually became a Doctorate in Cinematic Arts with a dissertation on a computer simulated graphic design interface.

- David Lynch continued to mentor Pat and in the late 1980s introduced him to Edwin Catmull, President of the new and independent Pixar.

-- He started a long-term relationship with Pixar as an interface consultant on many films such as Toy Story, Toy Story 3, Monsters Inc, and many more.

-- He had a major role in Pixar's first film that relied on more than computer-animated features as it included live-action film.

- Ultimately Pat returned to USC as an Associate Professor in the Cinematic Arts and rose the position of Deputy Department Chair.

-- His students, current and past, routinely reach out to him for advice and consultation.

-- His motto is "my door is always open and I promise to listen".

- He is most proud of his volunteer efforts to improve the resources for the Homeless Citizens of Los Angeles.

-- Beginning in the mid-80s, he participated in a project to focus public attention on the plight of the homeless.

--- He created a series of 30 and 60 second public service films that were written, acted, and edited using his Hollywood connections.

--- This project drew world-wide attention with it's message of compassion and care for the needy.

-- Pat was honored by the Los Angeles Times for his public service in 2009, attesting to his devotion to solving part of the homeless issues of Los Angeles.
